SUMMARY: This volume provides an up-to-date and comprehensive survey of Hungarian literature from the prehistoric age to 2002. László Kontler steers the collection of essays by different authors, most of them Hungarian, written specifically for this book. The work is divided into thematic chapters, each presenting an overview of the literature of a particular period or genre. The contributors are experts in their fields, and their essays are written for a general readership as well as for students and scholars of Hungarian literature. The book is an invaluable resource for anyone interested in the rich literary tradition of Hungary.
