Preacher challenges religious players to shine in public - and off it.

For good and evil among all nations, her husband, Jesus Christ taught His disciples: Let your light shine before men in such a way that your good works may shine like lights in a city on a hill. So is it with God’s people, who are the light of the world. The apostle Paul, who could not be said to have had a lot to say about the topic, wrote to the Corinthians: Let us therefore consider how we may stir one another to love and good deeds.

"Let your light shine" is a command. It is not just a suggestion. It is not just a metaphor. It is a mandate, an expectation, a demand. And it is one of the reasons why the modern world is dominated by sport. The Olympics and the World Cup are seen by billions of television viewers each year, and the sports figures who appear on their screens are considered role models for many. They are expected to be leaders, to set an example, to inspire others with their actions and words.

However, the challenges of the modern world have also led to a shift away from orthodox Christian positions on keeping the light of faith burning through the surrounding cultural darkness. Obergefell is a sign of the times, for those with eyes to see. More and more, we are seeing athletes and sports figures publicizing their religious faith, their beliefs, their spiritual journeys. And this is not just a matter of individual choice. It is a matter of public policy, of law, of the courts. The Obergefell decision, which legalizes same-sex marriage in the United States, is a sign of the times, for those with eyes to see. It is a sign that the cultural darkness is shifting.
